Why are you interested in becoming a member of the AB 617 steering committee in the selected community?

USC Environmental Health Centers - Community Engagement program for Health and the Environment works to develop community-academic partnerships to advance environmental health in disadvantaged urban and rural neighborhoods. Our center has a special focus on air pollution, where we conduct workshops with community members, students and public health professionals on air pollution in addition to facilitating community-driven air monitoring projects using AirBeams, P-Trucks and Purple Air devices to access exposure at the neighborhood level. As a steering committee member, we hope to continue to utilize/advise participatory and community-based methods to understand the impacts of industrial processes and chemical use on the environment as it relates to air pollutants, characterize pathways of human exposure, and evaluate approaches to increase health, equity and justice. You can find more information on our website: <https://envhealthcenters.usc.edu/> and Community Engagement: <https://envhealthcenters.usc.edu/resources>

How would you support outreach to ensure all voices in the community are heard?

As the Community Engagement Administrator, I have worked with different stakeholders to address environmental health, specifically working with community based organizations, schools, clinics and state agencies throughout Los Angeles including in Boyle Heights, East Los Angeles and Commerce. We would support by reporting back information to our community partners to ensure voices in the community are heard. That includes sharing information to their residents and memberships.
